

ADELE DIPASQUALE

Adele Dipasquale (IT, 1994) is a visual artist and researcher currently based in The Hague (NL), where they have graduated from the MA Artistic Research at the Royal Academy of Arts KABK in 2020. Working across various mediums as moving images, analog film, voice experimentations and writing, their work deals with the politics of language. Their research starts from a deep inquiry of the power of naming: how words produce worlds and allow for certain things to exist and not for others. In their practice they investigate how linguistic constructs shape reality, how they operate and how they can be both tools of oppression and resistance. In this process, they try to look for strategies of refusal and, possibly, reparation from normative definitions and taxonomies. Many of their works use some forms of defiance of language and representation as a first spark. The power of words to shape reality — as a spell makes something appear or disappear— is, for them, the most powerful and evident form of magic. Inspired by magical practises as a methodological tool, but also as a joyful invitation, their work tries to challenge fixed notions of meanings using miswords, miscomprehension, silence, language games and the never-fixed boundary between sound and voice. In the last years, they have been busy with two research trajectories: the first one is an exploration of actions of subversive mutism, the power of silence and other forms of non-verbal communication as gestures of refusal, while the second is ongoing research on practices of mediumship in a (his)story of silenced women.
